

Theory and Practice of Distance Learning (OLIT 535)

UNM's Organizational Learning & Instructional Technology Program offers a course in Fall 2008

This course is designed to provide educators, trainers, and instructional designers with introductory knowledge and skills, theoretical perspectives, and experiences necessary for understanding eLearning from a systems approach within an organization. Learners work in small groups to solve an authentic complex distance education problem for an actual client. The small groups collaborate, communicate through synchronous and asynchronous technologies including bulletin boards, Web conferencing, and social networking software. Learners explore issues of learner support, culture, and organizational change related to eLearning.

Instructor: Deb La Pointe, Ph.D.

E-mail: dlapointe@salud.unm.edu

Take this course as an elective, as part of the eLearning Professional Development Certificate Program, or to complete the requirements of the OLIT Master's Program.

