Defining and Addressing Expectations for L2 Writers Across the Discipline
Conference on College Composition and Communication
April 7, 2011

Lindsey Ives is a third year Ph.D. student in the department of English at the University of New Mexico. She teaches courses in professional writing as well as mainstream and multilingual sections of freshman composition. She recently completed her comprehensive examinations in Rhetorical Theory, Critical Theory, and African American Literature. She is coeditor of In Progress, a nascent online journal by, for, and about graduate students (inprogressjournal.net).
Email: ivesle@unm.edu

Tom Pierce is Director of the Adult Basic Education program at Central New Mexico Community College, and a PhD student in English at the University of New Mexico. He is particularly interested in linguistic variation among multilingual writers, and in facilitating transitions from Adult and Developmental education into higher education.
Email: TPierce@cnm.edu

Michael Schwartz is a Ph.D. candidate in Educational Linguistics at the University of New Mexico. He teaches freshman composition for multilingual and mainstream college students. He has also taught courses in first and second language acquisition for the College of Education at UNM as well as English for Academic Purposes in university intensive English programs. His research interests are in language, identity, and second language acquisition and in second language writing for adult learners of English.
Email: m_schwartz2004@yahoo.com

References: Student Perspective

References: Teacher’s Perspective

Ortmeier-Hooper, C. (2008). English may be my second language, but I'm not 'ESL'. College Composition and Communication, 59 (3), 389-419.

References: Administrator Perspective

Kells, Michelle Hall and Valerie Balester. (Eds). (1999.) Attending to the margins: Writing, researching, and teaching on the front lines. Portsmouth, NH: Boynton Cook.

Preto-Bay, Ana Maria and Hansen, Christine. (2008). Preparing for the tipping point: Designing writing programs to meet the needs of the changing population. WPA Journal, 30 (1-2), 37-57.